Not Elevator Music, But Rather Elevating Music

If you want to find out all things Celtic music, you've got to check out The CelticMusicFan's Weblog. Anne received a stellar review in this popular online blog--"I have heard most of her songs...and I tell you, this is something that you will not want to miss. This is not elevator music but rather elevating music."

"Unknown to some, there is a part of me that also digs rock. So when I heard Anne Roos play "The Unforgiven" by Metallica and "Stairway to Heaven" by Led Zeppelin, my interest was piqued. On an occasional observer, she may impose an airy fairy image perfect for Renaissance Fair. But this lady is not one-dimensional. Apart from being an accomplished harpist with formal training, she has also written books under her belt.

Her music is in demand in the wedding circle . Her books are sought after by musicians who want to make their careers playing in wedding receptions. Apart from being technical, she is also instinctive. And she can take a joke. I have heard most of her songs in her MySpace page and I tell you, this is something that you will not want to miss. This is not elevator music but rather elevating music. You can also get a glimpse of her books that are accompanied in the CDs. They are perfect companion to your coffee table."

The Celtic Music Fan blogmaster Jose Rommel "baxter" Labatos first fell in love with Enya's Watermark album and then he just started collecting anything and everything Celtic music. Baxter created a blog to connect with others who also love Celtic music. The Celtic Music Fan's Blog, a collection of album reviews and artist interviews, is fast becoming the one stop place to find out what's new in Celtic music on the Internet.
